Canva

Canva has tons of resume templates. Some are free, some are to pay for.

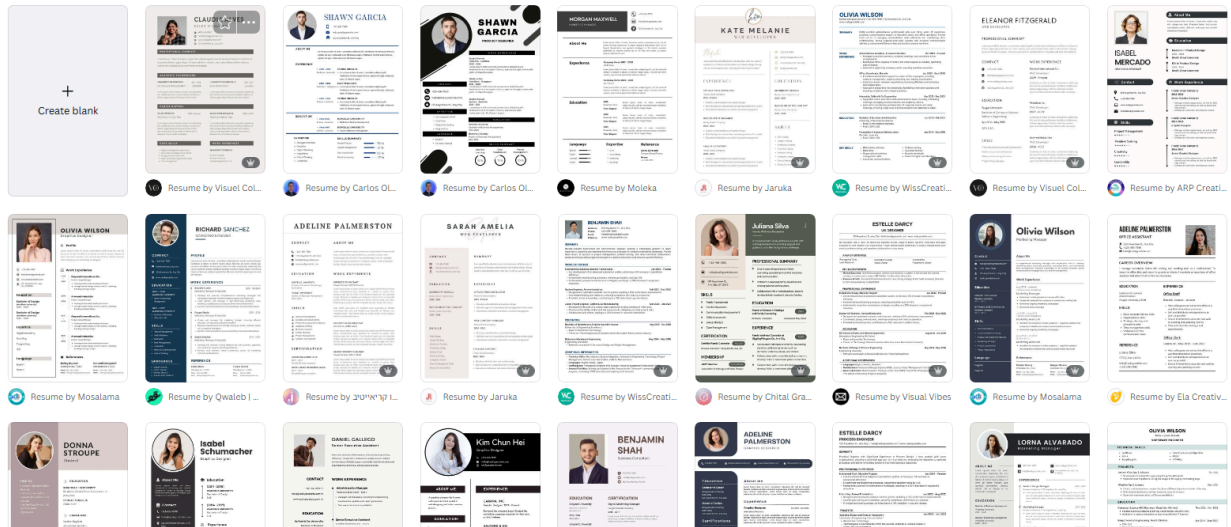

Here are some resume examples we made on Canva, please see this link:

If you want to use and adjust any of these templates see this template link Good Resume Template
When you click that link a copy will be created on your Canva account, and you will be able to make changes.
Microsoft Word

Microsoft Word also has some free resume templates
[Microsoft Word Templates](Microsoft Word Templates).

LinkedIn

If you have a nice tailored LinkedIn profile, you can download your profile and that can serve as your resume.

To download go to your profile -> click the Resources button -> Save to PDF.
Resume .com

You can also build a resume and cover letter for free on resume.com using their templates. You can log in using your Indeed account as they integrate with Indeed, or you can create a resume as a guest.

Resume .IO

You can also use resume.io. You can create a resume using a blank template, using AI, using free resume templates, or importing your own resume.

MyPerfectResume

Conclusion

- Canva and MS Word. Based on my experience Canva has a lot of free templates and they're more visually appealing than using MS Word and can be easier to move sections and text boxes around.

- If you already have a nice LinkedIn profile that's already tailored to the role you're applying for, then just save your profile as PDF and send that to recruiters or company hrs. If nothing else it is a great starting point.

- Resume .com, Resume .io, MyPerfectResume, are almost the same. You can import your resume, or build a resume based on the templates on their website, or use AI to help you craft your resume. But if I've to choose one, I like MyPerfectResume as it can be used to scan your resume for ATS compatibility.

- Adobe Express is just like Canva.
